STRATEGY REVIEW

Defending premium leadership in a shifting luxury market

Premium share is eroding at the edges, not the core. Defending it requires three coordinated moves, not a price response

01

Sharpen the value narrative

Reframe the brand around craft and provenance so the premium is understood, not just charged. Shift messaging from product features to enduring value.

02

Tier the portfolio deliberately

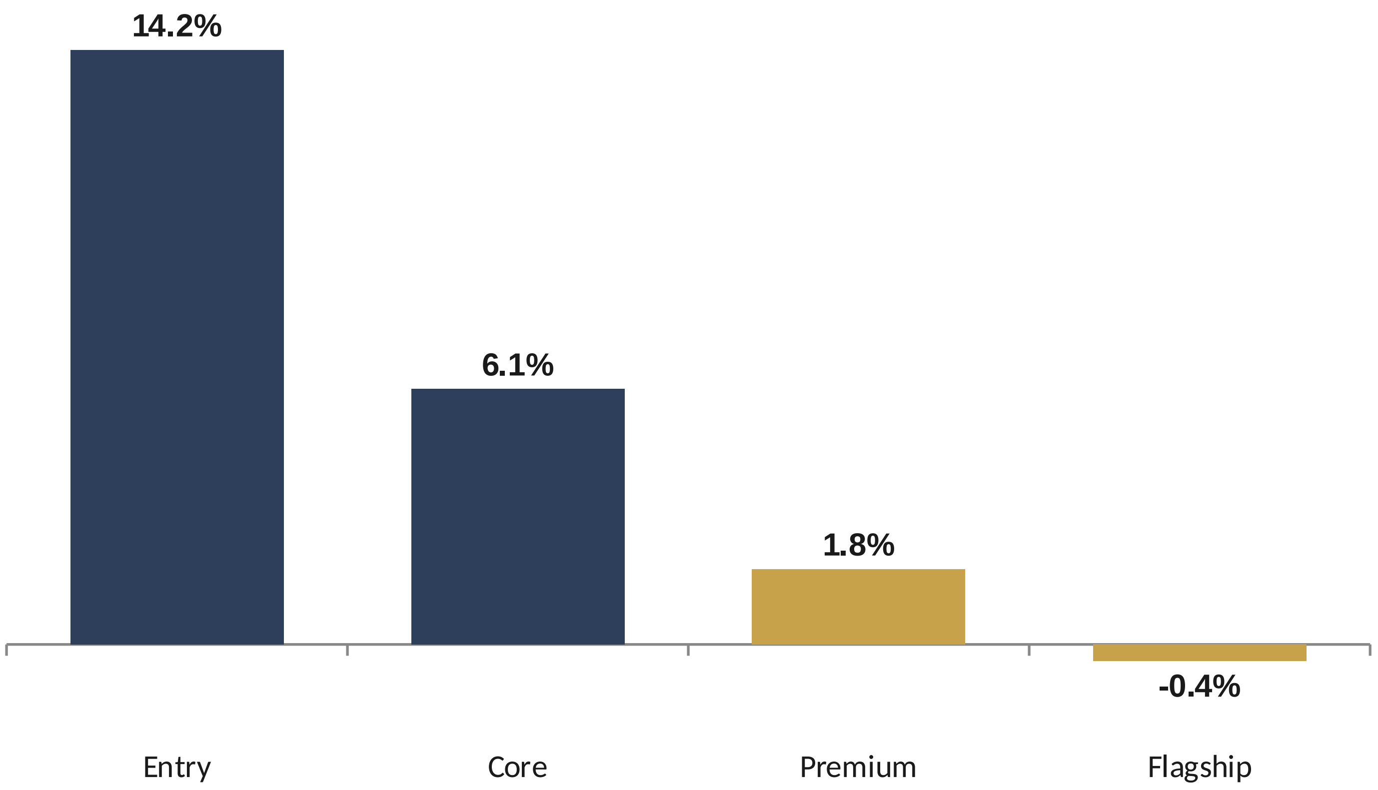
Introduce a defined entry tier to capture aspirational demand without diluting the flagship line or training customers to wait for discounts.

03

Own the direct relationship

Move volume toward owned channels to protect margin, control experience, and build first-party data the wholesale model never returned.

The premium tier still drives two-thirds of profit, but its growth has stalled while the entry segment accelerates



WHAT THIS MEANS

Growth is migrating downward.

Premium remains the profit engine, but flat growth signals the segment is maturing. The entry tier is where momentum now sits, and where competitors are recruiting tomorrow's premium buyers.

A phased twelve-month path turns the three moves into sequenced, measurable milestones

Phase 1

Months 1–3

Stabilise

Lock the value narrative; audit channel margin; brief leadership and align on the premium definition.

Phase 2

Months 4–7

Build

Launch the entry tier; pilot direct channel in two markets; stand up first-party data capture.

Phase 3

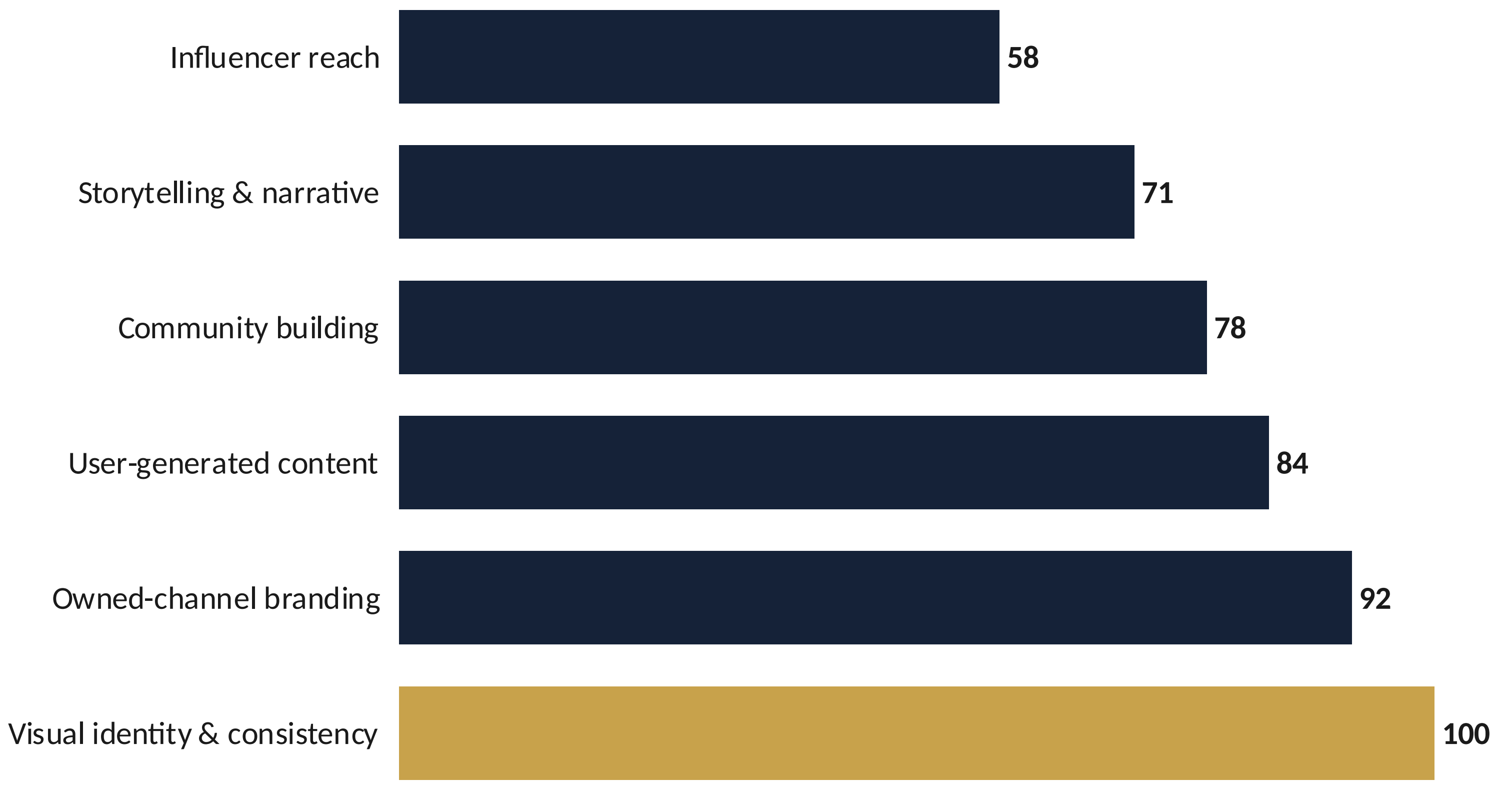
Months 8–12

Scale

Roll direct channel to priority markets; shift media to owned platforms; review tier performance.

Brand identity and consistency outweigh spend as drivers of engagement for emerging businesses

RELATIVE STRENGTH OF BRAND-GROWTH DRIVERS (indexed, 100 = strongest)



IMPLICATION

Identity beats budget.

The top drivers are disciplines a small brand can own without outspending incumbents. Growth follows consistency and trust, not media weight.

Winning the next phase means shifting from a wholesale, product-led model to an owned, identity-led one

	TODAY	TARGET STATE
Positioning	Product features and price	Craft, provenance and enduring value
Channel	Wholesale-dependent, low control	Owned channels, direct and controlled
Customer	Anonymous, transaction-led	Known, first-party data relationship
Portfolio	Single flagship tier	Deliberate tiers, entry to flagship
Growth driver	Media spend and discounting	Identity, consistency and community
